“ Five years ago my son, my funny, smart, loving and caring son, lost his battle with heroin. The dealer laced it with fentanyl which killed my son instantly. The coroner said he would have survived had it not been for the fentanyl. He struggled after sports injuries with pain killers, pot, heroin, then methadone and saboxone. He tried, he struggled. I feel that this young man's parents and family went through what we did. I'd like to tell Jesse's mother that the hurt will go away, but I try to be honest....it won't. I cry still every day. I do try to remember the good things we shared. Just always talk about him, let others say his name. Keep the faith and know that what God (or whoever your higher power may be) gave you your son, then took him back, will keep him safe until you're with him again. Take care of yourselves.....seek love and peace with each other.

“ Bill, Laura, Katie, and Erika,

Our deepest sympathy and prayers.

We had so much fun hanging around with our kids and Jesse and Erika, that they both felt like our own. The great number of times Jesse sat the barber chair until that was no longer necessary. The camping trips and boating and just hanging out with the boys tinkering on some sort of engine project. We miss those days of laughter.

Love,

Scott and Christy Johnson
